New tales of Kizu

This spring, an iconic style takes on new poetic tones when the Kizu Portable Table Lamp is introduced in two red marble variants. A dark version exudes Italian drama, while a light version brings to mind endless days in the southern sun.

The vivid structures of marble form the basis for new expressions for the Kizu Portable Table Lamp, which comes in two new variations this spring. In a study of the color red, alluring and diverse shades have been selected to create new tales starring the iconic lamp.

A light version in Breccia Pernice marble brings to mind the earthy hues of the Mediterranean. This burned rusty-orange stone with ivory streaks brings warmth and colour to a space, beautifully complimenting the soft glow that emits from the lampshade. By means of a small metal button on the top of the lamp, the light is easily dimmed to three levels.

The darker version shares the same functional features. Here the bright screen meets a base in Rosso Levanto marble, which oozes dark romance. Ranging from burgundy to chocolate and generously adorned with white veins this rich stone appears to be straight out of the Italian palazzi. Its dramatic presence is only enhanced as darkness falls and the light is turned on.

These sculptural lamps can act as an accent among neutrals or make a bolder counterpart to other rich hues. Place in the middle of a dining table, on a shelf or side table, or take it with you when you dine al fresco on a warm evening.
